everything seems to work wrong. Hester considered it imprudent to travel under his own proper name; he was afraid to do it; so he assumed another name. He was very unfortunate in the selection which he made. He took the name of a notorious thief who had bro-ken jail at Manafield, and for whose recapture a reward of $50 had been advertised. This circumstance resulted in very serious trouble to him. Loughlin at whose house he had stopped under the assumed name of this thief, came across Hester a second time at Centreville, and honestly believing him to be not the thief he was, but the thief he passed himself off for, determined to have him arrested.
